"A Letter to Our Readers and Their Parents!"

IT IS OUR EARNEST HOPE THAT YOU ENJOY reading our magazines. You know, there are many different kinds of stories, and we get a different kind of satisfaction from each one. We like the stories of Robin Hood and the Iliad of Homer, because we can imagine ourselves heroes, overcoming the enemy. We like stories of great men in history, because they make us ambitious to do good, kind deeds. We like stories of mischievous boys like Tom Sawyer, because Tom does many of the things we would enjoy doing, but some of them we cannot do.

Some of you probably choose books with a lot of pictures, because the pictures seem to make the story live. That, to some extent, explains your interest in comics.

In our magazines, we try to give you good pictures and interesting stories. We would like to feel, also, that we are helping you to take a stand in favor of right and justice, develop respect for law and order, and learn to protect weaker people, just like the heroes in our adventure stories.

The grown-ups of this world owe you young people an apology, because we haven't made the world a very secure and peaceful place in which to live. Our comics portray, it is true, some of the unhappy things that happen in the world. But they are things you know about anyway—and in the stories, at least, the good people always win. All of us wish it were that way in real life as well.

Just as there are good and bad people, good and bad radio programs, good and bad movies, so there is good and bad literature. In order to help you always choose the good, we will continue to do our best to maintain a high standard in our own magazines.

Please remember that comics, with their many pictures, are just one type of literature. We also want you to grow familiar with the great books in our vast literary heritage, and we have no doubt that, with guidance from your parents, teachers, and town librarians, you will become interested in those classics, and learn to love them.

Meanwhile, don't forget, though you can get the thrill of humor and adventure in comic magazines—they should, nonetheless, be considered in two ways: Not only for the pleasure they give you, but also as a stepping-stone to your appreciation of books that have stood the test of time as reading fare for all people, young and old.

Incidentally, one of our recent editorials used the word "endorsement" in connection with Dr. Thompson's services to us as Editorial Consultant. In the interest of further clarification of Dr. Thompson's functions, we wish to state that Marvel Comic Group submits all its published magazines to Dr. Thompson for review, criticism, and report to our staff, which is under constant instruction to accept Dr. Thompson's criticisms, and to abide by the same. In this way, we constantly strive to bring better comic magazines to our vast group of readers.

WOULD YOU LEND ME . . .

MISS CLARK'S history class rustled uncomfortably. They had just been informed that there would be a test that period.

"It's the little things that count—like surprises. Oh, well . . ." Lorry Wheeler sighed and dug into her jacket pocket for her pen. "Wouldn't you know it—wouldn't you just know it—Bert Belton borrowed my pen in English class!" Lorry looked around the room and was just in time to see Bert hand a fountain pen to Jack Woodridge. She was trying to attract his attention when she saw Jean Westley tap Bert on the shoulder and hold out her hand. Bert shrugged his shoulders and took another pen out of his pocket, handing it to Jean.

Lorry left her desk and walked over to where Bert was sitting. "Robert Belton! I'd like to have that pen you borrowed from me this morning!"

"Well, Lorry, if that's the way you feel about it—here!" Bert took out another pen and gave it to Lorry. Then he raised his hand. "Miss Clark, I don't have a pen. Guess I can't take the test—huh."

Miss Clark, without changing her expression, and without uttering a word, took a pen out of her desk and handed it to Bert. Bert's reputation as a "borrower" was widespread at Langley High. He borrowed anything from anybody. People were constantly telling themselves that they would never lend another thing to Bert, but they always ended up by loaning him whatever he asked for at the particular moment.

He did quite a lot of "borrowing" in the history class—mostly answers.

After the test was over Eddie Morton, Bert's favorite victim, called to him. "Hey, Lend-Lease! Where ya goin'? We've got math in about five minutes."

"Don't bother me now, my boy! Gotta get two tickets to the prom before they're all sold out!"

Bert disappeared down the corridor and Eddie couldn't help saying, "Tremblin' teacups! That guy even borrows time!"

"Hey Eddie! WAIT UP!!!" Eddie froze in his tracks. Bert came racing down the hall.

"See you later, Bert. Math y'know!" Eddie walked away. Bert walked after him.

"I only want three slices of the folding stuff!" Bert said as he clutched Eddie's arm.

"THREE DOLLARS!" Eddie's voice cracked. "Now list . . ."

That was the last comment Eddie made before he reached for his wallet.

Bert had interrupted him, and as usual, Eddie was trapped. He remembered a little too late that the three dollars he gave to Bert were to be used in purchasing his own tickets.

That afternoon everyone at the Varsity was discussing the prom.

"Jean told me she got a new dress to wear. Bet she'll look super!" Al Stanton sighed, and looked dreamily at his soda.

"Who are you takin', Bert?" asked Jack Woodridge.

"Oh, I'm takin' . . . uh . . . Say! I never thought of that!" exclaimed Bert. "I think I'll take Marge Bradley!"

"I bet Len Watson gets a kick out of that. He's takin' Marge to the prom," answered Jack.

"That's going to make it a bit difficult. Not too difficult though!" said Bert as he strolled out of the Varsity.

He walked over to the drug store where Len worked, and as he entered he called, "Hi, Len! Could you do me a favor? I know you'd never let me down."

"That's what you think, my innocent child. I'd let you down any time of day," answered Len.

"If you grant me this really simple favor, I'll take your place in the store for two afternoons—and what's more, I'll give you my pay."

"State your case, son!" Len was getting interested.

"Len, you know that I don't have a steady."

STEWART NAME RING CO., DEPT. 1377
616 WALNUT STREET, • CINCINNATI 2, OHIO

"Son, you don't even have an unsteady," he replied.

"I feel like a brother towards Margaret Bradley. I'd . . ."

"NO!"

"The least you can do for the condemned man is to let him finish before you sentence him," said Bert pleadingly.

"Okay. But make it brief—like a molecule."

"I feel like a brother towards Marge . . . er . . . Miss Bradley. I . . ."

"Cut out the Miss Bradley, funny man. You're not helpin' yourself."

"Look, Leonard. I want to ask Marge to go to a dance with me, but I thought I'd ask you first. It's the only fair thing. You know, the usual kind of shindig. I'll call her and tell her you said it was strictly on top with you—and if she doesn't believe me, you can tell her so yourself." Bert walked toward the phone booth.

"Gee, Bert, I dunno! She might . . ."

"I knew you wouldn't let an old pal down. Thanks, Len!" Bert was dialing Marge's number. He closed the door. He asked Marge to go to the prom with him. When she said she had a previous appointment with Len, he told her that Len knew all about it and was perfectly agreeable. He asked her if she wanted to talk to Len. Marge answered with words to the effect that if she ever spoke to Leonard Watson again she'd see herself in quicksand first. Bert told her he'd call for her at 8:00, and said good-bye.

"Well, does she wanna talk to me?" queried Len.

"Uh . . . not right now, son. Not right now." Bert thanked Len and left the drug store.

The next problem was a car. They had to get to the prom in style. His father was very difficult to handle. After all, he had been living with Bert for the past 16 years, in which time, he had managed to become somewhat immune to Bert's borrowing.

The prom was a week away. His father might be immune to his usual borrowing techniques, but a week's pleading and questioning should convince him that to let Bert use the car was the wisest, sanest decision he had made in a long time.

When the night of the prom arrived, the car was his. Bert got into it and was about to start off when he discovered that the amount of gasoline in the tank wouldn't take him much further than a block. It was one of those infrequent times when Bert was stumped. It didn't last long, however. Mr. Basham, their next door neighbor, was a salesman. He sold aviation gasoline. His back yard at that very moment was stacked with samples of his wares.

In moments, Bert was siphoning the high octane gasoline from one of the cans. He promised himself, however, that he would return it.

Once again behind the steering wheel, he realized that he had forgotten all about getting flowers for Marge. That would never do.

Then he remembered. His sister Betty had received some lovely flowers yesterday. He had seen her place them in the icebox so that they would keep longer. Betty wouldn't mind if he borrowed them. He'd get them back from Marge somehow. He raced to the kitchen and "borrowed" the corsage.

. . . Bert never stopped to wonder why the motor made such strange noises. All the way to the prom he tried to think of a way to get the flowers back from Marge.

When they arrived at the hall he realized that the flower problem was a small one indeed.

Eddie Morton, with his arms folded and his eyes glaring, stood at the door. Len Watson stood next to him, and it was very plain to Bert that they weren't out for fresh air.

"Hand 'em over!" said Eddie.

Bert gulped and gave the tickets to Eddie.

"Tell Marge, you . . . you . . . borrowing buzzard!" commanded Len.

When Bert had finished explaining to Marge, she threw his sister's flowers to the ground and stepped all over them.

He had seen enough by then to make a mad dash for the car. But the others were hot on his trail. He made it just in the nick of time, put the keys in, and hoped. The car coughed, grunted, went three feet—and stopped. He clutched the wheel furiously . . . but he already knew the answer. The high octane gasoline had burned out the motor!

As he crouched, quaking, behind the wheel of the car, and as the enraged trio came closer and closer, he prayed—prayed that he could "borrow" enough money to undo the damage.

By KENT B. STILES

Uncle Sam's final three commemoratives on the 1948 thirty-stamp program were the 3-cent blue with its vignette carrying part of a monument of Abraham Lincoln and a quotation from his Gettysburg Address eighty-five years earlier; the 3-cent red for the centenary of the American Turners Society, the design including that health organizations emblem; and the 3-cent red-violet for the centenary of the birth of Joel Chandler Harris, creator of the "Uncle Remus" Negro fictional character.

Before the last of these appeared, the Post Office Department had announced a few of the stamps being planned for 1949. These include the following:

A 6-cent red airmail, to meet the increased first-class airmail rate. Design, a DC-4 plane. Date of release, Jan. 18, at Washington.

A 4-cent red airmail postal card. Design, an eagle in flight with outstretched wings. Date of release, Jan. 10, at Washington.

For the bicentenary of the founding of Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Va. Color and design of this 3c item not immediately disclosed. Date of release, April 12, at Lexington.

A 3-cent commemorative in connection with Puerto Rico's first elected Governor taking office. Details not immediately made available.

For the centennial of Minnesota Territory. Details not immediately disclosed.

Commemorating the founding of Alexandria, Va. Details not immediately announced.

The Post Office Department is expected to issue also a stamp for the 150th anniversary of the District of Columbia.

Other special stamps likely will appear during 1949—but collectors are hopeful that the total will not reach 1948's deluge!
